

Hello, it's Hoi Ching again! This time, we'll be playing a life simulation board game. By making the right decisions, you may have a chance to attain financial freedom even at a young age. Let's check out the game together!

Keeping a record of your earnings, credit card debts and mortgages will help you manage your budget at a glance, avoid overspending, and give you a clear view of your monthly expenses.

The earlier you pay off a debt, the earlier you can start building your savings! Be it the student loan for college or your credit card debts, the compounded loan interest is what keeps you from financial freedom! Pay off the debt in advance to stride a step closer towards financial freedom!

How you plan your finances will impact your life significantly. Remember to set short as well as long-term financial goals, and accomplish them in different life stages with regular progress reviews to ensure your future financial stability.

It's the support from both my family and financial advisors! Not only can I now share my plan with them and have them monitor my spendings, but I can also obtain professional advice on potential debt restructuring or adjustment, which can help me hit the goal faster!

From now on I should rely on myself. Let's start working on our financial literacy and learn about earning passive income by investing! With well-thought-out short- and long-term investment plans as well as timely help from loan lenders, I can protect myself and my family against any unexpected events!

Congratulations on finishing the game and reaching "financial freedom". Every step that you took in the game was crucial to attaining financial freedom. Now that you're done with this game, you should have your own vision of what financial freedom looks like. Let's work hard to achieve it!
